

Cork Company Moves To The Big Smoke!

Cork-based company myguideTravel has made the big move from country to town, moving to brand new offices in Skibbereen following almost ten years at their farm base in Castletownshend, Co. Cork.

The move marks the online travel company's significant expansion over the last few years, including a recent €3 million merger with a Boston-based travel company. myguideTravel will employ up to forty people at the new Skibbereen offices.

myguideTravel CEO, Conor B. Buckley said "this move really represents the expansion of the company. In the last two years we have grown considerably through our myguideIreland, myguideBritain and myguideScotland companies, while we're just about to launch myguideNewEngland. We've recognised our potential in this market and are excited about our future prospects."

Established in Ireland in 1998 by Conor B. Buckley, myguideTravel is Ireland's number one inbound tour operator, providing expert local advice and assistance in planning a dream vacation or holiday. myguideTravel has operated in Britain since 2004.
